and sometimes the desire to settle down overrides a persons normally good sense. They end up trusting the wrong person, and in the worse case scenario, end up paying for that individuals shortcomings, emotionally for sure, and sometimes even financially.

The post is written by CreditScoreResource.com contributing author and former employee of the Minnesota Department of Commerce (MDC) Megan Eisenhower. Megan has offered free credit counseling to hundreds of people during her 11 year tenure at the MDC, and is a long time member of the National Foundation for Credit Counseling, the largest and longest-serving nonprofit credit counseling organization in the United States.

"Everyones looking for love and thinking about relationships at this time of the year," says Megan, "and sometimes the desire to settle down overrides a persons normally good sense. They end up trusting the wrong person, and in the worse case scenario, end up paying for that individuals shortcomings, emotionally for sure, and sometimes even financially." But what if there was a way to see inside of someone, a "crystal ball" that could give insight into their true personality and character. Well, actually there is - a credit score.

Â

Its reasonable to say that the best way to predict future behavior is to examine behavioral patterns of the past. If a person has behaved responsibly with credit, paying bills on time, and meeting the terms of their loans and credit cards, it will be reflected in an excellent credit score. A poor credit score however is an indicator that the individual is perhaps not the most reliable, and could be caused by major issues like foreclosure, bankruptcy, or liens. Finding out a potential mates credit score may not be the most romantic thing to do, but it can save individuals from heartache and worse in the future.

Â

Top Tips to Find a Mate with the Right Credit Score provides excellent advice about how simple everyday behaviors can provide clues as to whether a potential partner may have a high or low credit score rating. "You dont have to go poking through their personal belongings to find out a persons possible credit rating," Megan says, "but if your boyfriend or fiance is driving a Porsche and working at the local hamburger joint, it should be clear that hes probably living beyond his means."

Â

Both partners need to have the same goals in life in order for a relationship to work, and each has to exert an equal amount of effort to reach them. Life and relationships are difficult enough without the added stress of unnecessary or unexpected financial woes. Individuals can eliminate that possibility by being open about credit scores.
