Fairfax, Virginia-based contracting service Dirt Connections has released several new resources on both residential waterproofing and commercial waterproofing.

Online PR News â€“ 10-March-2016 â€“ Annandale, Virginia In preparation for the upcoming spring, Fairfax, Virginia-based professional residential and commercial waterproofing service Dirt Connections has released several resources to help consumers as they prepare for home or business related projects. These resources detail steps that families, as well as business owners and facility managers, must take prior to beginning a major home remodel or renovation, or a residential waterproofing, or commercial waterproofing project this spring.

Â

Residential waterproofing is vital to the longevity of a home. Effective residential waterproofing will protect a home's foundation, crawl spaces, basements, and attics, as well as all of the valuables contained therein, for years to come. Older homes that have not been inspected recently may have areas that leak, pool water, and attract mold, which can create a whole host of problems if left untreated for an extended period of time. Mold in a home's attic, crawlspace, basement, or bathrooms can present severe health risks to family members as well, especially the elderly and young children whose immune systems are not as strong as fully-grown adults.

Â

When it comes to commercial waterproofing, Dirt Connections' newly published resources advise that business owners and facility managers view undertaking a waterproofing project as similar to any other investment in their business. Effectively waterproofed facilities provide insurance that a severe weather event will have minimal effect on a business' ability to operate and generate a profit. Additionally, by pursuing a commercial waterproofing project, your facility will have less issue when complying with employee safety regulations and health codes through the elimination of harmful mold.

Â

These resources come as part of a series planned by Dirt Connections in preparation for the busy season of spring 2016. They have been designed to inform and prepare homeowners and business owners alike. Spring and summer are known as the most densely scheduled seasons for professional contractors, thus adequate preparation and planning on the part of the consumer is vital to ensure that projects are completed on time and on budget.
